This week I finally made the switch from Google Chrome to Mozilla Firefox.

For some time now, Google Chrome has had a persistent problem of hanging. It seems to be specific to a Mac running the Sonoma OS with multiple monitors – which is me of course. I am not sure how widespread the problem is on other platforms.

Google has been facing this problem for quite a while and seems to have no interest in fixing it. The problem has become bad lately as web page technology advances.

Overall this is a pretty painless switch as the two are very similar. I would say Chrome still enjoys more support from vendors than Firefox, but Firefox doesn't seem to be hanging for me.
